February 1, 2025

The New Deal Policial Party

The New Deal coalition was a political coalition that supported the Democratic Party starting in 1932. It was named after President Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal programs and included various voting blocs and interest groups. The coalition consisted of labor unions, blue-collar workers, big city machines, racial and religious minorities (especially Jews, Catholics, and African Americans), white Southerners, and intellectuals. This diverse group helped the Democratic Party become the majority party nationally for decades.

The coalition began to weaken with the decline of big city machines after 1940, the steady decline of labor unions after 1970, and the rise of neoliberalism under Ronald Reagan. Despite its eventual decline, the New Deal coalition had a significant impact on American politics and policy during its peak.